Bio. Sara A. Shaw is currently a PhD student at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas with a background in Music, Elementary Education, and M.Ed. in Curriculum and Instruction. She is a Graduate Assistant for the Department of Teaching and Learning and collaborates with both Career, Technical, and Postsecondary faculty as well as Teacher Education faculty in research and teaching. She is currently the Assistant to the Co-Editors for the Journal of Research in Technical Careers and has also served as Co-Director for the College of Education’s Rebel Academy Program that provides practicum experiences for Alternate Route to Licensure pre-service teachers. Sara has taught the course Methods of Teaching Workforce Education for both Business and Industry Licensure and Master’s students, and assists with evaluations for CTE practicum students. She has presented at research and workforce conferences and collaborated in research on several publications. She was part of the first cohort of ACTE LEAD, a leadership exploration and development program, and a selected leader for the New Women’s Leadership of Nevada (NEWL) Leadership Conference at the Women’s Research Institute of Nevada.

Project. The purpose of this study is to examine the lived experiences of female leaders from the perspective of females currently in leadership positions in postsecondary education. This project will investigate the intersection of gender, race, ethnicity, age, and socio-economic background. It seeks to understand how gender and other social identities affect leadership identities and decision-making of women in postsecondary institutions. This study will have theoretical significance for feminist theory and leadership scholarship, and practical significance for postsecondary institutions continued cultivation and support of female leaders.
